ABOUT ProMED

The International Society for Infectious Diseases's Program for Monitoring Emerging Diseases, more commonly known as ProMED, has been the world's leading event-based surveillance system since 1994, credited with being the first to alert the world to the emergence of, among others, SARS, Chikungunya, MERS, and COVID-19.

ProMED is unique in having a team of over 35 MD, DVM, and PhD-level experts around the globe who are continuously looking for signals of the next outbreak. These experts write posts for the ProMED website, sharing their expertise in the form of a "Moderator comment." ProMED now has 29 years of human-curated data that informs our ongoing surveillance efforts.

ProMED has over 29,000 unique email subscribers in over 175 countries and is used daily by academics and public health officials, as well as major industries including gas and oil, pharmaceutical, travel, domestic animal breeding, and engineering/construction.

PROMED TEAM 2022 STATS:

10 ProMED
Networks

6,637 Posts

ProMED consists of 10 different networks that are either language, geography, or topic-based. Moderators with regional and/or subject matter expertise create a post that includes expert commentary in conjunction with a primary news/data source for the relevant networks. Posts are edited by our professional Copy Editor staff, then reviewed by a senior editorial staff member who provides a final review and quality check before publication. This vetting of outbreak signals by multiple humans avoids many of the mistakes and reporting errors that slip through AI-only systems. The ProMED Moderators have written over 6,500 posts across the 10 different networks, with posts being available on the ProMED website from within the last 30 days and by signing up to receive ProMED posts by email.

ProMED's Moderator commentaries are our most valuable product, adding context that only human experts familiar with the diseases, geography, and local culture can provide. This brings value not only to government, medical, veterinary, and public health spheres, but also to a host of industries that need to understand risk to their workers, customers, and operations. Whether it is the travel industry needing to predict cruise and flight disruption, or the oil and gas industry deciding whether to make investments in remote parts of the world, ProMED provides critical expertise and insights into what is happening on the ground all over the globe, and includes the ability to crowdsource additional information in real-time from its global user base.

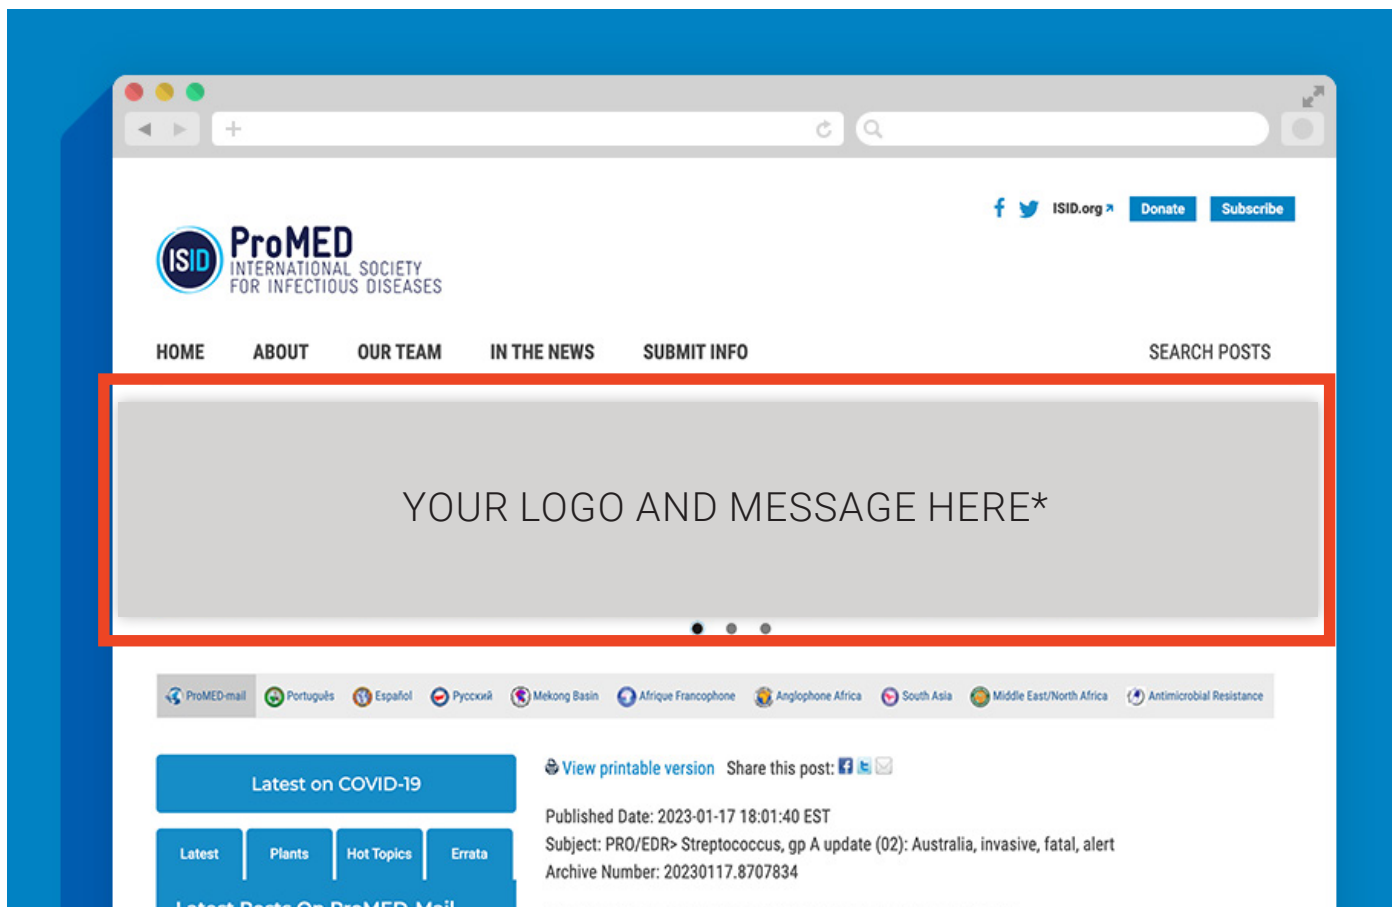

The International Society for Infectious Diseases (ISID) is excited to offer the opportunity to publicly support ProMED for the first time.
